Forgotten Women: A Tribute in Poetry

edited by Ginny Lowe Connors with an introduction by Marilyn Kallet

Grayson Books is delighted to announce the publication of Forgotten Women: A Tribute in Poetry. The subjects of the poems in this book are artists and scientists, sharpshooters and lighthouse keepers, factory workers, athletes, homemakers, and musicians. There are those who had brief windows of fame, and others who were or are completely anonymous. This remarkable anthology, including work by some of today's most insightful poets, is sure to be valued by those who want to fill in the gaps of history, and make it *her*story too.

Praise for Forgotten Women:

"Forgotten Women is an anthology that serves two great purposes: it honors, celebrates, and presents women's lives...across time, across status and race, and it showcases the power of the poetry inspired by women. In an era where you'd think that women's lives would always be celebrated or considered, we find that women's lives and stories are often disrespected and dismissed. Connors has brought together poems of astounding diversity from poets as varied as their subjects, thus allowing the reader to find and learn about women little known or to see in a radically different way ones who are better-known. The generosity of these words show these women are remembered, not forgotten, and you should remember them too."
